8. Purpose / Aims / Objectives of the event:

Intellectual Property Rights are being viewed as being of increasing importance in many fields of business. IPR refers to the legal protection accorded to certain inventions or creations of the mind which is essential for promoting progress and innovation. However, one potential hindrance to their being considered of any significant value is the lack of information to public. As academia has to constantly and continually resort to creation of mind and intellect, so it is all the more important for the faculties of Higher Educational Institutions to be aware of the subject. IPRs are also important and fundamental to encourage investment in research as without some form of protection to the creations of human intellect, both inventors and investors will be at risk.
